Hi Dominic,

I left you a lengthy voicemail yesterday. Is this something your membership would be interested in?

Best regards,

Jim

Dear Innovator,

Health experts are recommending that Americans avoid crowds and take precautions like social distancing to minimize the spread of COVID-19, or coronavirus.

This puts governments around the country in a tough position. How can you accommodate a surge in need for services while simultaneously promoting social distancing? Also, how can you improve access to new and existing relief programs that are critical to businesses and residents?

Enter digital services. Governments can leverage technology to deliver all manner of services, collect and manage applications for relief, and digitize paper processes, while promoting healthy behavior. Digital services makes it possible for residents to complete applications online and allows staff to manage cases remotely.

To support state and local governments during this critical time, CityBase is offering our online form and case management software for free, for two months. Under this initiative, cities, counties, and states can use the software to publish up to five online services.

The software is easy to use, can be rolled out in a matter of days, and sits natively on your existing websites. Learn how it works to protect your residents and staff.

To start your free trial or learn more, please respond to this email or schedule a call.
